Scottish Piping Heritage and "Family Tree" received their tuition.

.

This "family tree" shows the relationships between pipers and their teachers dating back to the days of the MacCrimmon family, pipers to the MacLeods of Dunvegan. The MacCrimmons are regarded as an important family for the development of piping in the 16th and 17th centuries, and through their pupils, the modern style of pibroch playing, in particular, emerged.

Many current day pipers can trace their piping genealogy in one way or another to the individuals shown here.

The map key shows the location in which some the individuals, whose piping history is displayed in this museum lived and

